SOUTH O' THE NORTH POLE

By Hal E. Roach.

The Spats determine to go after "big game" particularly polar bears. Equipped with what they think necessary to hunt in the Frigid Zones, the party comes to grief quickly when they encounter their first heavy snow storm. They are aided by some friendly Indians and when the storm has blown over, they once more search for big game, but this time they are more fortunate because their search is brought to an end abruptly when a huge grizzly bear starts to do a little hunting on his own account. Fortunately for the Spats, he is a rather friendly sort of bear and while he doesn't do them any personal harm or damage, he badly wrecks the cabin in which they had taken shelter and at the end puts the valiant hunters to a rather ignominious flight.
